III. Reading comprehension

In 1348–49 a terrible disease broke out in Europe. People called it the Black Death. In two years nearly half of Europe's population died. The disease was bubonic plague. Fleas carried the plague. The fleas lived on black rats. These rats arrived in Europe on ships from Asia. However, people didn't know what caused the plague and the disease spread quickly. Medieval towns were very different from today's cities. Most of the buildings were made of wood and mud. Streets were dirty. People threw all their rubbish into the streets, and there were rats everywhere. Nearly 30 million people died of the plague in Europe during this period. The plague continued to hit Europe until the end of the 17th century. One of the biggest outbreaks was the Great Plague of London. It started in 1665, during the hot months of August and July. In one week, more than 7 thousand people died of the plague. The total number of deaths was about 70 thousand. Many people ran away from London.

bubonic plague = the plague - dżuma outbreak - epidemia
