11-year-old Jonathan is one of the Britain's karate kids. Twice a week after school he to his local sports centre. He takes off his grey school uniform, and puts on his white trousers and white jacket. Then he stands with the other students, bows to his teacher, and the lesson begins.

Karate is a Japanese word. It means 'empty hands'. You don't need anything for karate – just your hands and feet. 'But it's important to think, too,' says Jonathan.

Karate is becoming very popular with British children. Even small children aged 5 or 6 can do karate. 'Karate is an ideal sport for children', says Jonathan's instructor, Liam. 'It's exciting, but it isn't dangerous.'

Jonathan wears a white belt – for beginners. 'I'd like to get a black belt one day,' he says. 'Maybe when I'm 20.'
