Education in England

In England, children start school when they are 5 years old. They can leave at 16. Everybody does science, maths and English. They can also do history, geography, art, design and technology, a foreign language (usually French or Spanish), physical education and music. There are exams at the ages of 8, 11, 14 and 16. Some pupils stay and do exams at 18. They can go to university.

Most pupils start at a primary school and then go to a larger secondary school at the age of 11. Most schools are state schools, which provide free education, but there are also public schools, which the parents of pupils have to pay for.

The school day starts at 8:45 am and finishes at 4:15 pm. Most lessons last forty-five minutes to sixty minutes, and there's usually an hour for lunch. There is usually a break at 11:00 am. There are autumn, spring and summer terms in English schools. Holidays are usually two weeks at Christmas and Easter, and six weeks in the summer. Most schools have sports grounds for football, cricket, rugby and athletics. During the school year there are often visits to museums and art galleries, and to camps for outdoor activities such as climbing and canoeing.
