The São João Festival takes place in a Portuguese city, Porto, every year in June. It begins in the evening on 23rd June and finishes the next day. Numerous tourists come to Portugal on that days to have fun at the concerts and admire street performers. Instead of going to bed early, people stay up late and spend time outside. The most unusual part of the celebration happens in the middle of the night. At midnight there is an incredible firework display. After the show, a big fight begins. People start hitting passers-by with soft plastic hammers. Some vendors sell these hammers in the streets. After the battle, people usually get hungry, so they go to restaurants and have a meal together. Local people recommend grilled sardines and peppers with fresh tomato salad. It is a busy night, so tourists should book a table in a restaurant in advance.
