On a sunny day, an owl wanted to sleep when a grasshopper came and sat close to the owl's house. When the insect saw the bird, it started singing loudly. The owl said to the grasshopper - I am trying to sleep. Can you stop making noise? Please, find a different place to sing. The grasshopper answered rudely - I can sing wherever I want, and you can sleep wherever you want. I want to sing today, and you do nothing.

The grasshopper was not afraid of the owl. The bird couldn't see well during the day and could not hurt the insect. So the grasshopper continued singing loudly.

In the bird's opinion, the insect was rude. The owl was angry and decided it was time to give the grasshopper a lesson. The owl said - Dear grasshopper! I am surprised you are such a good singer. The grasshopper was flattered and said - I am glad you like my voice. I am a bit thirsty, but I want to play, and you can admire me. The owl said - There is enough water in my hollow. After you finish singing, please be my guest and come to my house and drink some water. The grasshopper started singing loudly. The insect sang until its throat became dry. When the grasshopper finished singing, the owl said - Please come inside and drink some water.

When the grasshopper came into the owl's house to drink something, the bird caught the insect in its beak and swallowed it. Then the owl fell asleep peacefully.
