III. Reading comprehension

Seven men are sitting at the table in the East London pub "The Hen and the Chicken". The men are professional thieves. They are looking at the man who is standing next to the table. His name is Bruce Reynolds, a man in his forties, their leader. Bruce Reynolds told them to come to the pub. They are listening to him patiently. The eight men usually lead completely separate lives and rarely meet together. Their families don't know anything about their criminal activities. However, today they are talking about their next robbery. Reynolds says they are going to rob a Royal Mail train, which is used to transfer High-Value Packages from Scotland to England. The leader explains the train can contain several million pounds. To rob the train the thieves must be well-prepared so they must plan their actions carefully. Bruce Reynolds asks two men of the gang, Buster Edwards and Gordon Goody, to be sure the train is not just a police trap. The thieves want to rob the train at night when it is not in a station. It should be in an open area so they need to stop it on its way but they are not sure how to do it. They do not know a lot about trains but they are eager to rob the train so they want to ask for help from another gang that specializes in manipulating railway signals.
